

FASHION

In the common sense there is a need to imitate others to identify with them. This psychological need is most clearly evident in a dress. Fashion is also found in other areas of social life.

Everything may be fashionable not only clothing, appearance, behaviour, but also the type of music, an art style or a world view, that is, in general, a lifestyle that is popular at some time.

In a narrower sense, the word fashion refers to a fashion design.

Fashion always has its avant-garde, the group that first initiates an imitation of something that later forms clothing.

The style in fashion is associated with an individual, adapted to a specific user need, which is the psychological way of expressing oneself through the form of clothing.

BAG

It is an essential element of women's attire. I recommend the supersized bag, which is very fashionable this season. It may be the bagbags. Not only it is fashionable but also practical. A large bag makes you optically slimmer, especially worn in the crook of the elbow. Clutches are ideal for more elegant and evening dresses.

SUNGLASSES

are always fashionable! The best are large and angular. Remember that slender and round glasses do not suit your face, on the contrary, they may make it seem even more round.

Remember: do not be afraid of a colour, Experiment and follow the fashion!

Border Collie

The breed originated in Scotland, or in fact in the Border Country land lying between England and Scotland. Hence the origin of the name of the breed: "border" is in English, "limit", while "collie" means "useful object". The breed was developed in terms of utility and officially recognized in 1843. The pattern was finally established in 1976. The dog has a proportionate body structure, but its appearance indicates the grace and perfect harmony with an appropriate body weight. Now there are growing divisions in the pattern between dogs intended for exhibitions. They are characterized by a lighter body, less profuse coat, an elongated shape of the head. Border Collies are Intelligent and clever dogs which are attentive and sensitive to training. The dogs love running and perform tasks given to them by a guide. The dog's owner should have time and be an active person. Border Collie needs a master of quiet disposition, who will be able to live in harmony with it and be able to communicate with it because otherwise the border easily gets out of control.

Nature

Nature

Caucasian Shepherd

Caucasian Shepherd Dog is an old breed of herding dogs. These shepherd dogs come from the Caucasus. They found their way to Europe in the late sixties.

In areas where it still prevails its ears are cut to prevent any injuries from wolves. Caucasians with ears not cut have a tendency to ear diseases. These dogs can measure up to 80 cm and can weigh as much as 70 kg.

They are also resistant to cold, being intolerant of buildings, much more suitable to spending their time in the open air. Their coat colours are grey, greyblack, reddish - straw, speckled and spotted.

Nature

These dogs are nice and quiet, balanced, unobtrusive, they do not accept strangers at home. In addition they feel rather uneasy.

Tatra sheepdog

Podhale is one of five Polish breeds recognized by the FCI. Originally the dogs were bred to guard herds of sheep and cows. Until now, they can be found in halls with sheep. They are also well suited as guard dogs. Characterized by incredible courage they can ward off wolves and even bears. Their hair is used to make sweaters, scarves and other items of clothing Besides mountains and plains are suitable for housing. The dogs require frequent walking, preferably combined with the possibility of running. Tatra sheepdogs have a gentle nature. They are alert, wellintolerant children, very attached to the owner and obedient. They have high intelligence.

Nature

Nature

Fairy tales retold

The life of a prince living on the lake was quite monotonous: giving orders and punishing criminals. His passion, however, was fishing a lot. He often came home, ate an exquisite dinner, then went to sleep. But one day after the time of the rest something strange happened. The prince got up early in the morning, went to the lake, cast a net a few times and finally pulled out a gold fish. When asked if it is gold, the fish admitted that it was truly made of gold. He took it to his palace and placed in a large titanium jar. He fed it and the fish proposed to fulfil his wishes, if he let it go. The fisherman said that he had no requests. When the next day he sailed over the lake, the fish turned into a witch (which the ruler was very fond of), cleaned the palace and cooked dinner, and again returned to the jar. The prince noticed the changes, and when the fish asked him how dinner had tasted, he replied that it was not her business. The goldfish was a little worried. She had to do something to make Lord marry her because only then she would be released from the spell. She prepared breakfast in the morning, dug the flowerbeds in the garden. The Prince pretended that nothing had been said. When evening came, the palace was beautifully dressed, curtains were ironed and on the table there was a cake with plums. The Lord asked the fish to bake cheesecake the next day, he did not like plums. She burst into tears and said that she would do it if he happened to marry her. At that moment Prince approached Fish and kissed her mouth. Suddenly he turned into a poor fisherman, and the palace became a small hut. It turned out that the fairy of the cave, also called Good Witch turned him into a vicious prince and a witch into a goldfish. The fisherman and the witch decided to get married. If they did not still have remained a fisherman and a witch. They lived a short time (because of an allergy which infected them both) luckily, though, because in upside down fairy tales it is always the case.

THE PRINCE

THE GOLDFISH
